NEW DEEP WAVE CUT . . . Mr. Norman of New York, visiting stylist at the May Co. South Bay, stresses "inside work" in presenting his new hair cutting technique. He states that a "basically sound hair cut must be started deep in the under layers of hair . . . not just on the surface."

Visiting Hair Stylist Introduces New 'Cut'

"Inside work" is the secret of hair styling that is well cut and keeps its setting well.

That is the keynote of the DEEP WAVE CUT being introduced by the talented and well-known stylist, Mr. Norman of New York City, who will be in the May Co. South Bay Beauty Salon June 11 through June 23.

The professional phrase "deep inside work" is the way this expert describes his new cutting technique. And he means that to be basically sound a hair cut must be started deep in the underlayers of hair — not just on the surface.

"A good cut is like the strong foundation of a house — it's unseen, but there is support for the design which meets the eye. This is what determines the way your setting will last," explains this gifted hair stylist.

"We cut with the growth patterns of your hair, we cut so that the setting will last not just for the day you walk out of a beauty salon, but the day after and the days after that. A woman should always be able to brush or comb back the basic style lines of her hair set, if it is cut and set properly, even if she can't quite achieve the same degree of perfection which her professional stylist has given her at the salon.

"The basic lines of the silhouette should always be evident and provide a neat, well-groomed look for a woman no matter how many days after her salon setting."

This man is also an expert in the art of permanenting, having developed a special way of waving hair so that his Deep Wave Cut has all the body it needs, yet has the fashion look of top-layer smoothness.

He does this with varicized rollers and precisely-controlled firmness of curl, following the same principle of "sound inside work." Deep, toward the scalp, there is a firm degree of curl, while the outer layers of hair are given softer curl.

This stylist's consultations on cutting permanenting and styling are complimentary. It is suggested that you telephone the salon for an appointment.
